Write your aisle order once, and the rest of this kit follows it

Walk your shop in your head from the door to the till and number what you pass. Every list in here is then written in that order rather than in categories invented by somebody who has never been to your shop — which is the whole reason for walking back across the place for the thing you forgot.

Stand in front of the fridge with this page

Almost everything bought twice is bought because nobody looked. Five minutes here, with the fridge open and the cupboard door open, is the difference between a list and a guess — and it is also where the week’s cooking decides itself, because what has to be used up comes first.

BREAKFASTS AND LUNCHES TO COVER

Plan two fewer meals than you think

Seven dinners get planned, four get cooked, and the other three turn up on page 7 as a bag of salad and a packet of chicken thighs. Plan five, write the freezer night and the nobody-cooks night down as real plans rather than failures, and the waste log stops filling up.

Cleaning, paper, tins, rice and pasta, drinks, pet food, washing powder. None of it needs to be bought fresh and all of it is heavy, so it belongs in one trip a month rather than in the weekly basket where it quietly doubles the bill.

WHERE THE BIG SHOP GOES

Shop, and when _____

NEVER WORTH BUYING BIG Goes off, or nobody likes it that much

The top-up is where the money actually goes

Three quick trips a week for bread and milk cost more than most households' meat budget, because nobody walks out of a shop with only bread and milk. If there is going to be a top-up, write it here first — and if the list is two items long, send whoever can go in and out without a basket.

BUDGET _____ SPENT _____ LEFT _____

The line that matters is not the big shop, it is the number of rows. Four shops a month and a full trolley beats eleven shops and a basket, every time.

Compare per 100 g, not per packet

The shelf label carries a unit price in small print, and it is the only number on the shelf that tells the truth. The big box is often dearer per gram than the middle one, the offer is sometimes dearer than the plain shelf price, and the loose vegetables are almost always cheaper than the same vegetables in a bag.

WHY IT WAS NOT EATEN

The bin is the cheapest place to look for money

Nothing on this page was bought carelessly. It was bought by somebody planning to eat well: the salad, the herbs, the yoghurts, the second bag of spinach. Keeping this page for one month changes what goes in the trolley more than any budget does, because you stop arguing with yourself about what you should eat and start buying what you actually ate.

WHAT WE ARE DOING DIFFERENTLY

The four honest reasons: bought too much, never got round to it, went off sooner than expected, nobody actually likes it. Write the real one.

You do not need to remember to buy rice. You need to know the number below which rice goes on the list — and then anybody in the house can write the list, not just the person who holds it all in their head. Fill this in once, in front of the open cupboard, and page 2 becomes a two-minute job.
