WHAT KIND OF NIGHT IS THIS _____ Decide it now

- ☐ A party
- ☐ Six people and a good dinner
- ☐ Out, then back here
- ☐ Children up till midnight
- ☐ Two of us and something better than usual
- ☐ Asleep by eleven, on purpose

MIDNIGHT ITSELF _____ Decide it in advance

The two things that ruin New Year’s Eve

Not enough to eat after eleven, and no way home.
Everything else is decoration. Page 3 puts food on the table twice, and page 2 asks every guest how they are getting home before they arrive — because at one in the morning on the first of January there are no taxis, and there is no talking anyone out of driving.

BOOKED, ORDERED, PAID FOR _____

- ☐ _____

THE BITS THAT MAKE IT FEEL LIKE NEW YEAR

- ☐ Something fizzy, and something fizzy without alcohol
- ☐ Enough glasses out before eleven
- ☐ Whatever is on the television, found in advance
- ☐ A song for the first minute of the year
- ☐ A photograph, taken before everyone is tired

TOMORROW MORNING _____ Set it up tonight

Who is here, and how they leave.

DRIVING

Beds, sofas and a spare toothbrush

Tick the Bed column for anyone who might stay, and count them now rather than at midnight. Two people who planned to drive and changed their minds is the usual number. Blankets, a spare toothbrush and somewhere dark to sleep cost you nothing in advance and are impossible to produce at two in the morning.

The only fixed deadline in the whole shop

Start at eight and work down

WHO IS ON IT

Write the time next to each

- 1 Food out, the first time
Before anyone has had three drinks
- 2 Music up, lights down
The room changes or it does not
- 3 Glasses out, all of them
Counted, on a table, not in a cupboard
- 4 Bottles opened and poured
Ten minutes before, not on the hour
- 5 Everyone into one room
The hardest five minutes of the night
- 6 MIDNIGHT
Whatever you decided on page 1
- 7 Phone calls and messages
The network is busy; give it ten minutes
- 8 Food out, the second time
This is the one people remember
- 9 Taxis, coats, beds
Say it out loud once, kindly

Grazing, not a sit-down

TOAST

THE WHOLE EVENING

☐	6 people	1 bottle	3 bottles
☐	12 people	2 bottles	6 bottles
☐	20 people	4 bottles	10 bottles
☐	30 people	5 bottles	15 bottles

The evening column assumes about half a bottle of wine a head across the night. Round up. Nobody has ever regretted one bottle too many in the cupboard on the second of January.

Count them properly; make it as good

ICE, GLASSES, AND THE REST

- ☐ More ice than you believe
- ☐ Glasses counted, and a marker to name them
- ☐ A bottle opener that is not lost
- ☐ Bin bags out early, one for the glass

Use a calendar, not your memory

Scroll back through your own photographs, or your diary, one month at a time. Almost nobody can remember March in December, and the year always turns out to have had more in it than it felt like. That is the point of the page.

PEOPLE WHO MATTERED THIS YEAR

SOMETHING YOU FINISHED — Even if nobody noticed

6/9

A list of new things to start, on top of a year that is already full, is how January resolutions die by February. Before you add anything, take something off. Write down what you are putting down, and where it is written matters: a thing dropped on paper is dropped, a thing dropped in your head comes back.

Nobody plans this week, and it decides the year

Renewals fall due, prices go up quietly, and the diary is empty enough to actually do something about it. An hour spent here in the first week is worth more than any resolution on this list.
